

JOURNAL INFORMATION

The Latin American Journal of Content & Language Integrated Learning (LACLIL) is a no-fee, open-access, peer-reviewed journal focused on CLIL (Content and Language Integrated Learning), multilingualism, multilingual education, languages for special purposes, interculturality, and CALL (computer-assisted language learning) throughout Latin America and around the world aimed at teachers, researchers, and educational administrators who are interested in researching, implementing, or improving language-learning approaches, techniques, materials, and policies.

LACLIL welcomes article submissions from researchers whose work is inspired in or stems from instructional practices implemented in language-learning subjects or subjects taught in or through an additional language. Submissions concerning (but not necessarily limited to) the following areas are welcomed:

- educational approaches in which additional languages are used for the learning and teaching of both content and language (CLIL).
- multilingual educational approaches.
- language learning and teaching for specific purposes.
- language learning, teaching, and/or evaluation practices aimed at fostering cognition and metacognition through language or content.
- the use of information and communication technologies to foster communicative competences enhancing cognition, metacognition and the learning of language, content, or both.
- the learning of culture and/or intercultural competences in or through additional languages.
- teacher professional development initiatives in the aforementioned areas.
